The Basics The first thing you will need to understand about Photoshop is that it works in layers, which enables you to apply edits to an image one at a time. Each layer also has a layer mask that acts as a filter on any edits that are added to a layer's transparency. Layers are the key to Photoshop. To move to a new layer you must first create one by clicking the New Layer button at the bottom of the image window. Then you will place the image in a new layer and modify it until you are satisfied. You can control what happens to the pixels on the new layer by using a mask, which tells Photoshop to keep or to adjust all the pixels inside the mask and to ignore all the pixels outside it. You can use the Pen Tool to add text or shapes to a layer. A shape placed on a layer with a mask can be edited without changing the pixels outside the mask, so you can use the line tool to create lines or fill shapes with color. With Smart Objects you can manipulate the pixels of the photo, but keep the changes inside the mask. You will use the Smart Brush, found under the Edit menu, to edit Smart Objects. Edit Photos with the Content-Aware Scaling Tool The Content-Aware Scaling tool, found under the Adjust menu, makes it easy to make a photo appear smaller or larger while using a mask, like a layer mask. When you click the Content-Aware Scaling tool, you will get a preview. Use the tool to resize the pixels inside the mask, and Photoshop will adjust all the pixels in code is:- A: Just change your transition from linear to ease-out: transition-all:2s ease-out; The linear transition delays the change of property values by half a second for each animation frame. You can think of an ease-out transition as a free-running, instantaneous change of color. FIDDLE A: In order to have a transition which changes the property instantly, you have to use the -webkit-transition-timing-function property. For example, #loader { width: 100px; height: 100px; background-color: black; display: inline-block; transition-all: 2s linear; -webkit-transition-timing-function: linear; } #loader.active { background-color: gold; } or else, you can write the one-line CSS, so that you can include a transition property in your CSS: #loader { width: 100px; height: 100px; background-color: black; display: inline-block; transition: width 2s linear, height 2s linear; } #loader.active { background-color: gold; } For the U.S. military, the Big Tent represents the future.

Q: how to animate a css attribute with a transition:all I am working on a project where i would like to apply a CSS animation to a class. CSS:- #loader{ width:100px; height:100px; background-color:black; display:inline-block; transition-all:2s linear; } #loader.active{ background-color:gold; } with this code i can convert the color from black to gold over a 2 second period. What i want is a transition in which the color changes instantly without a delay, I want the color change to be instant from black to gold. How do i achieve this? Fiddle
